

Analysis of Voters' Psychological and Sociological Attitudes Towards Policy Makers

To cite this article: Collaborate, Current Science, Volume 5, No. 6-01, 2024, p. 01– 17. - 0099-0001-2401-0501.

Our studies are in a format accredited, approved, and supported by EAALS - European Academic Studies and Laboratory Services. ("Scientific Studies - Current Science Georgia") "EAALS offers all our works, services, and publications to the world scientists at the stage of carrying our control, accreditation, and support processes to the international platform." ("CURRENT SCIENCE") ("Scientific Studies - Current Science Georgia")
ISSN: 2667-9515

Barcode: 977266795001

Editors Group:

Concessionaire: Tsisana Kharabadze

Niyaz Bokvadze

Prof. Sabrina Corbi

Prof. Samantha Lewes

Assoc. Prof. Osman Doruk

""• Current Science Multidisciplinary Academic Journal with Review Panel is a monthly multidisciplinary academic" ("CURRENT SCIENCE" ("Scientific Studies - Current

CURRENT SCIENCE

Science Georgia”) (“Scientific Studies - Current Science Georgia”) Science Georgia”) journal with a multi-science peer-review.” (“Scientific Studies - Current Science

Georgia”) (“Scientific Studies - Current Science Georgia”)

““The magazine will be at the subscriber's address in the first week of the month.”“

(“Scientific Studies - Current Science Georgia”)

• The journal continues to be included in all international rankings and registrations. Quality articles and publications accelerate this (“Scientific Studies

-Current Science Georgia”)

““• Response or rejection time for applications varies between 30 and 90 days.”“

(“Scientific Studies - Current Science Georgia”)

Article Application Date: December 2024 Article Publication Date: December 2024 Article Type: Review

2

THIS JOURNAL INCLUDED IN MANY INDEXES, INCLUDING
ADVANCED SCIENCES INDEX. ADVANCED SCIENCES INDEX
(ASI) EUROPEAN SCIENCE EVALUATION CENTER
KIRCHSTRASSE 4.56761 | RHINELAND-PALATINATE,
GERMANY PHONE: +49(177) 8684-353 PHONE: +49(177) 8684-353
EMAILS: ASI@EUROPE.DE

Maharram TAGHIZADE

Orcid : 0009-0006-7212-8283

Prof. Dr. Kürşat Şahin YILDIRIMER

0000-0001-5896-2956

Abstract

When analyzing the viewpoints of voters towards policymakers from psychological and sociological standpoints, it is essential to assess the impact of public opinion, the perceived level of responsiveness of the political system, and the manipulation of public opinion by the elite (Margolis and Mauser, 1989). Public opinion has a substantial impact on voters' impression of officials. In a democratic system, politicians are obligated to consider the opinions and perspectives of the general public. Nevertheless, studies have shown that political leaders possess the ability to shape public sentiment by using diverse strategies, such as leveraging mass media. This manipulation may influence voters' impressions of lawmakers and their decision-making process. Furthermore, it is greatly influenced by the way people view the degree to which politicians are responsive to the political system. Their confidence in politicians may diminish, so undermining their faith in the significance and efficacy of their votes. Doubts about the political system's receptiveness to citizens' concerns and wants might erode their trust. Ultimately, the examination of voters' psychological and sociological perspectives on policymakers reveals the significance of the general public, the impact of influential individuals, and the perceived level of effectiveness of the political system. This research emphasizes the challenge of comprehending the correlation between voters and politicians. The significance of accurate weather prediction is often disregarded in the contemporary era characterized by rapid changes. The perspectives of voters about policy makers should be duly considered. In the current dynamic global landscape, it is crucial for voters to possess an accurate perception of policy makers, as well as a thorough comprehension of their stance on policy matters. Policy makers must take into account the psychological and sociological factors that impact voters. They need to understand the level of responsiveness of the political system and how voters' perception of the system's value directly influences their voting behavior. Policymakers should acknowledge the significant influence of public sentiment on women's rights in determining the efficacy and credibility of programs and representative institutions. Policymakers should conduct an inquiry into the social and psychological determinants that impact voters. Amidst the fast-paced evolution of our contemporary society, it is of utmost importance for voters to possess a precise comprehension of the viewpoints held by politicians. Policymakers must consider the psychological and social variables that impact voting behavior.

CURRENT SCIENCE

Key Words: Electorate, Policy Makers, Psychology and Electorate, Sociology and Electorate, Electoral Attitudes

Introduction

Politicians must comprehend the social and psychological variables that have a significant impact on society. Comprehending these attributes enables policymakers to create prudent selections that are in line with the desires and apprehensions of the electorate. Furthermore, it is crucial for individuals to recognize that public opinion is not an autonomous entity, but rather a malleable force that can be influenced and manipulated by political leaders using various techniques, such as the mass media. By seeing public opinion as a variable that is influenced by other factors, policymakers may get a deeper understanding of and effectively handle the fluctuations and trends of public opinion. Ensuring the accuracy of this information is vital for maintaining confidence and credibility in the political system, as well as ensuring that policies align with the preferences of their intended beneficiaries. Policymakers must possess a comprehensive understanding of the political system's responsiveness and public opinion to successfully address voters' requests and concerns. Put simply, politicians need to disregard the preferences of the general people. Policymakers often depend on representative sample polls to precisely ascertain public attitudes. The purpose of these surveys is to reveal a wide range of viewpoints in order to get a deeper understanding of the public's perspectives and preferences. Policymakers may enhance their decision-making and policy formulation by considering the intricacies of society and the influential factors that shape it. This approach enables them to develop policies that are attuned to the interests and values of the constituents they represent.

CURRENT SCIENCE

Public Opinion and Policy Development

Policymakers must acknowledge that the public is capable of undergoing continuous transformation. Therefore, it is important to consistently evaluate and comprehend the origins of support for policies and practices that influence voters. Policymakers should refrain from exclusively relying on public opinion surveys as the only means of ascertaining the people's preferences. It is important for them to consider the settings and broader social mechanisms that influence society. Ultimately, politicians must possess a comprehensive understanding of the psychological and social elements that shape public opinion.

Aim

Policymakers must possess the ability to successfully address voters' desires and concerns and make sound policy decisions. However, it is crucial for them to recognize that public opinion is subject to change over time. Consequently, it is necessary for them to consistently scrutinize and comprehend the origins of the backing for laws and practices that impact voters. It is important to analyze the media's role, along with other instruments used by political elites, in shaping public opinion. Policymakers are able to develop policies that are more adaptable and aligned with the desires and opinions of the population they represent. Policymakers should do research on the social and psychological processes that shape public opinion in order to have a comprehensive understanding of its complexity. This knowledge will empower them to efficiently address people' issues and needs and choose reputable policies. Policymakers must recognize that individuals are susceptible to psychological and social influences. Gaining a comprehensive understanding of these matters enables policymakers to precisely evaluate the fairness and precision of public opinion surveys. Policymakers must possess a thorough comprehension of the psychological and sociological aspects that influence public opinion in order to make more discerning judgments, considering the contextual components and social dynamics that define society. It is important to have the ability to efficiently address the demands and concerns of voters and make well-informed policy choices. This enables them to verify that their policies align with the preferences and convictions of the general public, while also assuring the validity of their judgments.

CURRENT SCIENCE

Methodology

Policy makers should conduct an inquiry into the societal and psychological determinants that impact society. Providing this information will empower them to properly address people' issues and requests and make informed policy decisions. Policymakers must possess a comprehensive understanding of the psychological and social determinants that impact public opinion. It is vital for them to possess the capability to promptly address the desires and worries of voters and make well-founded policy decisions. This enables them to guarantee that their policies align with the preferences and convictions of the people, while also maintaining the legitimacy of their judgments. Policymakers must recognize that individuals are susceptible to psychological and social influences. Gaining comprehension of these matters enables policymakers to assess the inclusiveness and precision of public opinion surveys. Incorporating contextual information and social dynamics that influence society allows them to make more discerning selections. Policy makers should conduct an inquiry into the societal and psychological determinants that impact society. This knowledge will empower them to efficiently address people' issues and needs and choose reputable policies.

Literature Review

Politicians must acknowledge that people are influenced by a multitude of social and psychological variables. Gaining comprehension of these matters enables policymakers to effectively evaluate the inclusiveness and precision of public opinion surveys. Incorporating contextual aspects and social dynamics that influence society, they may enhance their decision-

6

THIS JOURNAL INCLUDED IN MANY INDEXES, INCLUDING
ADVANCED SCIENCES INDEX. ADVANCED SCIENCES INDEX
(ASI) EUROPEAN SCIENCE EVALUATION CENTER
KIRCHSTRASSE 4.56761 | RHINELAND-PALATINATE,
GERMANY PHONE: +49(177) 8684-353 PHONE: +49(177) 8684-353
EMAILS: ASI@EUROPE.DE

CURRENT SCIENCE

making process to be more perceptive. Ultimately, policymakers should thoroughly examine the social and psychological determinants that have an impact on society. This knowledge enables them to effectively address the needs and concerns of voters and make policy decisions that align with the public's preferences and values. Policymakers must possess a comprehensive understanding of the societal and psychological determinants that have an impact on voters. In order to make decisions that align with people's views and desires, politicians must have a comprehensive understanding of the psychological and sociological impacts on society. This knowledge will enable them to react more effectively to the requests and concerns of voters. Policymakers must possess a comprehensive understanding of the societal and psychological determinants that impact voter behavior. This data enables them to effectively address the needs and concerns of voters and make policy decisions that align with the public's preferences and opinions. Policymakers must possess a comprehensive understanding of the societal and psychological determinants that have an impact on voters. This data will enable them to address voters' desires and concerns more effectively, leading to policy decisions that really reflect the public's sentiment. Policymakers must possess a comprehensive understanding of the societal and psychological determinants that have an impact on voters.

Voters' Attitudes Towards Policy Makers: Psychological and Sociological Factors

Policymakers must possess a comprehensive understanding of the societal and psychological determinants that have an impact on voters. This data enables them to effectively address the needs and concerns of voters and make policy decisions that align with the public's preferences and opinions. Moreover, policymakers may enhance public confidence and guarantee that their judgments are representative of the many perspectives and experiences of society by comprehending and addressing these problems. In order to make well-informed decisions that align with the tastes and views of voters, policymakers need to have a comprehensive understanding of the psychological and social factors that shape public opinion. This information will enable them to react more knowledgeably to voters' wants and concerns. Policymakers should take into account the sociological and psychological elements that constitute society as seen by the voters. This consideration may assist policymakers in

7

THIS JOURNAL INCLUDED IN MANY INDEXES, INCLUDING
ADVANCED SCIENCES INDEX. ADVANCED SCIENCES INDEX
(ASI) EUROPEAN SCIENCE EVALUATION CENTER
KIRCHSTRASSE 4.56761 | RHINELAND-PALATINATE,
GERMANY PHONE: +49(177) 8684-353 PHONE: +49(177) 8684-353
EMAILS: ASI@EUROPE.DE

CURRENT SCIENCE

formulating policies that are more attuned to the public's preferences, hence resulting in improved governance and more voter satisfaction.

Voters believe that governments should prioritize the study of social and psychological factors that impact society. Based on this knowledge, policymakers will choose strategies that consider the concerns and desires of people, leading to a government that is more representative and efficient. Voters need politicians to possess profound understanding of the social and psychological determinants impacting society, as this would facilitate the establishment of a more efficient and receptive government that effectively addresses the demands of voters.

Policymakers should possess knowledge of the societal and psychological determinants that impact voter behavior. This knowledge is vital for politicians to make informed choices that are in line with the opinions and preferences of voters. This leads to a government that is more efficient and adaptable. Policymakers should take into account the societal and psychological determinants that impact voters, enabling them to formulate policies that align with popular concerns and views, so bolstering voter confidence and garnering support.

Policymakers should take into account the societal and psychological elements that impact voters. This information will enable voters to formulate policies that align with their preferences and requirements, so fostering a more just and comprehensive society. Policymakers should take into account social and psychological elements from the standpoint of the voters. Having this comprehension is crucial in formulating policies that are in accordance with the views and objectives of voters and inspire trust in the government. Policymakers should take into account social and psychological elements from the standpoint of the voters. Having this consciousness is essential for formulating policies that address the concerns and aspirations of voters, resulting in government that is more comprehensive and efficient. Policymakers should conduct an inquiry into the societal and psychological determinants that shape public opinion from the perspective of voters. This evaluation is vital for policymakers to guarantee that their activities align with the principles and requirements of the individuals they serve. This fosters trust and confidence in the government's capacity to resolve issues. Voters assert that legislators should consider the psychological and sociological elements that impact public opinion in order to formulate policies that really reflect the desires and concerns of the populace. Policymakers must possess a comprehensive understanding of the societal and psychological determinants that impact voter behavior.

CURRENT SCIENCE

Findings

It enables voters to make informed decisions that align with their preferences and aspirations. In due course, a government will arise that more precisely embodies the convictions and anxieties of the populace. Voters assert that legislators should possess an awareness of the social and psychological variables that have an influence on society. This understanding empowers voters to formulate policies that are in line with their goals and beliefs, while also fostering trust in the government's capacity to represent and fulfill the requirements of the citizens. Policymakers should take into account social and psychological elements from the standpoint of the voters. Policymakers must possess this level of awareness in order to develop policies that are not only effective but also in line with the perspectives and encounters of voters, so enhancing the feeling of connection and trust between the government and its population. Policymakers should take into account the social and psychological determinants that impact voters. This knowledge will assist policymakers in formulating comprehensive and adaptable policies that address the concerns and welfare of voters, while also fostering trust and contentment. Policymakers should take into account the psychological and sociological aspects that shape public opinion and make decisions that really align with and benefit the constituents they represent. Policymakers must possess a comprehensive understanding of the societal and psychological determinants that have an impact on voters. Based on this knowledge, politicians must effectively address the desires and concerns of voters and develop policies that are responsive, inclusive, and reflective of society.

Argument

CURRENT SCIENCE

Diverse perspectives exist throughout every sector of society. Policymakers should conduct an inquiry into the societal and psychological determinants that impact voter behavior. Providing this information will empower voters to make informed decisions aligned with their objectives and values, ultimately resulting in the formulation of more effective policies that enjoy widespread acceptance and support from the public. Politicians should possess an understanding of the social and psychological influences that impact society as seen by people. This understanding will enable them to formulate policies that not only tackle the difficulties confronting voters, but also policies that are in harmony with their views, values, and experiences. This will enhance public trust in the government and its ability to advocate for their interests. Policymakers should conduct an inquiry into the social and psychological determinants that shape society from the perspective of voters. Such understanding is crucial for policymakers to effectively assess the desires and preferences of voters and formulate policies that address their worries and aspirations. Voters and policy officials should possess an awareness of the social and psychological aspects that have an influence on society. This understanding will enhance policymakers' comprehension of voters' motives and their fundamental ideologies, enabling them to formulate policies that align more closely with public sentiment and effectively address the prevailing societal problems that have the most significance for the constituents they represent. Policymakers must recognize and appreciate the societal and psychological determinants that impact society from the perspective of voters. This information will enable legislators to make more informed choices, considering the many perspectives and requirements of voters. Consequently, the development of policies that are both more efficient and inclusive will ensue, accurately reflecting the concerns and objectives of the voters. Policymakers should conduct an inquiry into the societal and psychological determinants that impact voter behavior. Policymakers need to use this knowledge to formulate policies that align with the ideas and wishes of voters, fostering trust and engagement between the government and the people. Voters argue that legislators must possess an understanding of psychological and social elements in order to formulate policies that accurately reflect the desires and preferences of the general population. This information will enhance the legitimacy and efficacy of policy, as well as increase voter engagement and satisfaction. Policymakers must take into account the societal and psychological elements that constitute the viewpoint of voters. Having this comprehension will assist policymakers in formulating policies that are in accordance with the needs, beliefs, and concerns of voters, so enhancing the democratic process.

Strengthening Ties Between Government and People Working

Politicians must recognize the significance of psychological and sociological elements in influencing public opinion from the viewpoint of voters. Recognition of these factors is crucial for policymakers to effectively address the concerns and objectives of voters, fostering trust and collaboration between the government and the people. Politicians must comprehend the societal and psychological variables that shape public opinion from the perspective of voters. This information will assist policymakers in formulating well-informed policies that align with the demands and views of voters. It will also aid in the development of more efficient and responsive policies that accurately reflect the interests and welfare of voters. Politicians should possess an understanding of the social and psychological influences that impact society as seen by people. Adopting this viewpoint would enable policymakers to formulate policies that are in accordance with the convictions of voters, promote more engagement and receptiveness in governance, and propel the progress of the democratic system. Politicians should possess an understanding of the social and psychological influences that impact society as seen by people. This revelation will empower policymakers to effectively tackle the complaints and ambitions of people, therefore fostering trust, transparency, and responsibility within the government. To effectively gauge and tackle popular opinion, officials should prioritize the examination of sociological and psychological variables from the standpoint of the voters. In the event of such an occurrence, policies that more accurately align with the beliefs and requirements of voters and enhance their trust will arise. Voters want politicians to actively engage with the social and psychological aspects that impact society. This participation will assist policymakers in gaining a comprehensive understanding of voters' concerns, objectives, and principles, hence resulting in the formulation of more receptive and efficacious policies.

CURRENT SCIENCE

Societal progress occurs within a larger context of social and psychological factors. Voters want politicians to actively engage with the social and psychological aspects that impact society. This involvement will assist policymakers in formulating policies that tackle fundamental social and psychological mechanisms, resulting in more significant and efficient governing decisions that are more attuned to the desires and principles of voters. Voters want politicians to actively engage with the social and psychological aspects that impact society. Participation in policymaking will provide policymakers with the necessary information to make well-informed choices. This will include considering the many viewpoints and experiences of voters, and will contribute to promoting equality, social cohesion, and active involvement in policy-making processes. Policymakers should proactively strive to comprehend the social and psychological determinants that impact voters. This information will assist voters in formulating evidence-based policies and ensuring that their desires and concerns are addressed. Policymakers should proactively investigate the psychological and social aspects that impact public opinion, as seen from the viewpoint of a voter. These variables should be used to design policies that really reflect the perspectives and convictions of the people they cater to. Voters should recognize that politicians are swayed by the propaganda disseminated by the privileged class via the media, rather than being guided by an impartial force of popular sentiment. Policymakers should rigorously scrutinize and assess sources of popular opinion. This may be attributed to their impact on media and the shaping of public perception and understanding of political matters. Voters must recognize the capacity of the media and political leaders to influence public opinion, and politicians should be aware of this as well. In order to guarantee that policies are grounded on objective and impartial evidence rather than influenced by the interests of certain groups or media narratives, it is essential for decision-making procedures to be transparent, responsible, and autonomous. Policymakers must acknowledge that public opinion is shaped and controlled by elite activities, including the use of mass media and other methods, as seen by the voters.

Participation of Psychology and Sociology in the Policy Making Process

12

THIS JOURNAL INCLUDED IN MANY INDEXES, INCLUDING
ADVANCED SCIENCES INDEX. ADVANCED SCIENCES INDEX
(ASI) EUROPEAN SCIENCE EVALUATION CENTER
KIRCHSTRASSE 4.56761 | RHINELAND-PALATINATE,
GERMANY PHONE: +49(177) 8684-353 PHONE: +49(177) 8684-353
EMAILS: ASI@EUROPE.DE

CURRENT SCIENCE

An Analysis from the Viewpoint of a Voter Voters deem it essential to include psychology and sociology into the policymaking process to guarantee that policies align with voters' wants and concerns.

In order to successfully address the varied viewpoints and experiences of voters, policymakers must first familiarize themselves with the psychological determinants that influence public opinion. Subsequently, they examine the societal repercussions of policy decisions. Policymakers may enhance the likelihood of creating resonant and publicly supported policies by taking these factors into consideration. In addition, policymakers may address and rectify any biases or inequities that may be present in policy proposals by considering social and psychological variables. This strategy might potentially result in the implementation of more equitable and comprehensive policies that foster social unity and enhance the level of confidence and cooperation between the government and its constituents. Policymakers must acknowledge that voters are more affected by group dynamics, social customs, and cognitive biases rather than rational thinking. By integrating psychological and sociological insights into the process of policy formulation, policymakers may enhance their understanding of the impact of these factors on society, enabling them to make more knowledgeable and effective decisions. These insights may assist policymakers in formulating policies that are highly attuned to the interests and values of voters. Additionally, they can aid in predicting unforeseen responses and unintended consequences. Hence, from the perspective of the electorate, the incorporation of psychology and sociology into the policy-making process has great significance in comprehending and addressing the many perspectives and needs of the general public. This strategy might potentially result in the implementation of more equitable and comprehensive policies that foster social unity and enhance the level of confidence and cooperation between the government and its constituents.

Media's Impact on the Public: A Voter's Views

The media influences the formation of public opinion about political matters and the development of policies, as seen from the standpoint of the voters. The inclusion of public opinion in governance is crucial since it serves as a reflection of the viewpoints and preferences held by voters. By analyzing public sentiment and incorporating it into policy decisions, authorities may guarantee that their actions align with the aggregate desires of the people they represent.

CURRENT SCIENCE

The Influence of Elites and Mass Media on Public Opinion

An Analysis from the Viewpoint of a Voter It is vital for voters to comprehend the impact of the media and influential individuals on popular sentiment. By altering the information and narratives that voters are exposed to, this influence has the potential to modify their thinking and decisions. Importance of Contextual Insight from Voters: Voters This information enables policymakers to shape particular policy choices by using the larger perspectives and principles of the public. Manipulation of Public Opinion: Voter's Point of View: The manipulation of public opinion by voters, media, and political leaders is a significant issue. The veracity and dependability of the information we receive prompts questions about its alignment with our interests as voters.

Voter Perspective

The Importance of Incorporating Psychology and Sociology into the Policy-Making Process: The Public's Perspective:

Integrating psychology and sociology into the policy-making process is essential for comprehending and resolving the varied viewpoints and requirements of the public.

By integrating these fields, policymakers may develop policies that are attuned to the psychological and social determinants that influence society.

The Effect of Mass Media in Forming Public Opinion: Voter Perspective

CURRENT SCIENCE

The media's content and storylines are significantly shaped by our opinions and voting preferences (Borges, 2015). The influence of technological advancements on mass media: Perspective of the electorate: The influence of technological advancements on mass media has a profound effect on mass communication. As a result of these alterations, there has been a rise in the quantity of news sources, leading to a division among the audience. Consequently, it is important for voters to meticulously scrutinize the information they ingest and contemplate a multitude of perspectives before to reaching a conclusion.

The Role of Voters in the Policy Making Process

Voters consider transparency and accountability to be essential in the governing process. Transparency and accountability guarantee that lawmakers make choices grounded on precise and impartial facts, while also prioritizing the public's interests.

The reference "Zed" comes from Margolis and Mauser's publication in 1989. Electors prioritize transparency and responsibility in the formulation of policies. This empowers policymakers to make informed and deliberate choices for the benefit of the general population. Public Influence on Policy: Voters believe that the general people should have substantial influence over policy decisions. Policymakers should disregard the opinions and preferences of the general people. Nevertheless, it is important to acknowledge that individuals may often lack contextual knowledge, which is essential for connecting specific circumstances to broader ideas and principles. Therefore, it is important to guarantee that the general public is provided with precise information and have a comprehensive understanding of the procedures involved in making policy decisions.

The Influence of Political Elites on Public Opinion: A Voter's Viewpoint: Voters express apprehension over the capacity of political leaders to sway public sentiment via the media.

Restriction

15

THIS JOURNAL INCLUDED IN MANY INDEXES, INCLUDING
ADVANCED SCIENCES INDEX. ADVANCED SCIENCES INDEX
(ASI) EUROPEAN SCIENCE EVALUATION CENTER
KIRCHSTRASSE 4.56761 | RHINELAND-PALATINATE,
GERMANY PHONE: +49(177) 8684-353 PHONE: +49(177) 8684-353
EMAILS: ASI@EUROPE.DE

CURRENT SCIENCE

The research is limited to scientific research that has been conducted worldwide and have been included in the literature. The field study was conducted on a specific group of partner students. Therefore, there may be limitations in generalizing the results to a general population. Future studies based on larger sample groups including student groups with different demographic characteristics may improve the generalizability of the results.

The nutritional habits and knowledge levels of the students participating in the study were based on self-reports. This may cause participants to provide incomplete or misleading information about their own eating habits. In future studies, comparing self-reports with data obtained using objective measurement tools may provide more reliable results.

The study focused on a group of students in a specific region. Therefore, a more comprehensive study including participants from different geographical regions may be more informative in understanding cross-regional differences in dietary habits.

The study was conducted during a specific period and the effects on students' dietary habits may reflect seasonal or specific periodic changes. This should be addressed in a follow-up study over a longer period of time.

In this study, the general socioeconomic status of the students was determined, but the effects of these factors on dietary habits were not examined in more detail. Future studies focusing on this topic may be recommended to better understand the effects of socioeconomic factors on dietary preferences.

Notices

Evaluation: Evaluated by internal and external consultants.

Conflict of Interest: The authors declare no conflict of interest related to this article.

Financial Support: The authors did not report any use of financial support for this article

Conclusion

Voters believe that political leaders have the ability to manipulate public opinion via the use of mass media. Political leaders are aware that the media may be used to influence public opinion and alter public narratives. Voters are aware that political leaders have the ability to sway public opinion, and they recognize the importance of mass media in bridging the gap between political initiatives and the general population. From the standpoint of a voter, the proliferation of polls and their prominence in media outlets has sparked apprehension over the potential manipulation of public sentiment. Voters are become more skeptical, recognizing that the information they get from the media and surveys may be manipulated by political leaders. It is believed that politicians should be held responsible for their acts and decisions in order to prevent the manipulation or disregard of public opinion. Voters prioritize the significance of transparency and responsibility in the formulation of policies. It is important for voters to guarantee that government and political leaders attentively heed the views of the people.

References

- Borges, W. (2015, January 1). Mass Media and Politics. <https://doi.org/10.1016/b978-0-08-097086-8.93164-7>
- Margolis, M., & Mauser, G. A. (1989, April 1). Public opinion as a dependent variable: A framework for analysis. <https://doi.org/10.1080/10584609.1989.9962866>